THE FRENCH
REVIVE MARRIAGE MARKETS

A story is going the rounds of the American press that the marriage market is being revived in certain parts of France, particularly in Poutou and Vendee. The war left France with many hundreds of thousands of women who in the ordinary course of events could hardly be expected to become wives, their prospective husbands having become killed or maimed. Moreover, the burden of taxation which the French people have to shoulder has made the males more cautious in venturing into matrimony, for the idea that two can live as cheaply as one is not a French proverb. The marriage market idea is not designed to strike a balance between the sexes. A million eligible men cannot be summoned forth from their graves. The idea is to encourage every available man to take a wife, and this idea is said to be working out satisfactorily.

The Get-Acquainted Club

The marriage markets are becoming an established feature of the life of hundreds of villages and towns. Usually they are held on the regular weekly markets with nothing on exhibition but the girls and their mirrors. The idea was promoted, we suppose, partly for the purpose of attracting young men from a distance to the markets. It might be supposed that the young men in any particular neighborhood would have plenty of opportunities of meeting the young ladies in the same parish and forming their own opinion as to their value as wives. The marriage market gives the same opportunity to young men from other parishes. They have also the advantage of knowing that the girls who display themselves at the market are desirous of getting married and are not committed to some unknown rival. It must often happen that for many reasons a girl would not make such a strong appeal to the young men with whom she has grown up as to a stranger who sees her for the first time.

Catalogue of Beauty

The girls are selected for the market by men who are supposed to be good judges of looks and who understand thoroughly the sort of wife a young Frenchman should have. These experts travel about the country—at whose instance is not explained—and make a list of all the marriageable girls in the neighborhood. These are classified according to age and looks and build, and their various qualifications are noted. These items are set down on a card which is supplied each girl, and she is invited to present herself at the next market, where a special place is reserved for the contestants. Each girl comes provided with a large red parasol, which she carries over her head, besides offering her protection against the sun and rain. It also serves the purpose of a small tent when a prospective husband wishes to make an investigation at close quarters, and even, as we are told, help himself to a sample embrace.

Few Without Offers

For a casual kiss the girl merely lowers her parasol to fend off the eyes of the curious, but when the investigator desires to refresh himself more copiously, she turns her back upon the spectators and holds the parasol in such a way that both are shut off from the public view. This gesture with the parasol is usually a signal for applause, because it is supposed that the man and the girl are strongly attracted and that marriage is likely to result. At the close of the market there is a general jollification, and many of the girls walk off with their new friends to receive at least one offer of marriage. It is usual, we are told, for a girl to receive at least one offer of marriage in the course of a single fair, and the more attractive, as a rule, receive several. When a girl attends several affairs without being appropriated, it is almost certain that she has unusually high standards rather than that she is singularly barren of attractions.

Beauty Contests

Those who think that this tough-and-ready courtship is not likely to lead to happy and permanent ties are refuted by statistics collected in the districts where it is popular, which show that there are fewer divorces and fewer illegitimate children than elsewhere. It is also noted that the birth rates in these districts are greater than elsewhere, which is a matter of greater importance to the government of France. On this account the government is said to be watching the experiments with keen interest. It is also promoting beauty contests with the hope of increasing the marriage rate, although one would think that a girl pretty enough to win one of these contests, or even make a creditable showing in one of them, would not lack for admirers in her own neighborhood. Still, as the philosopher remarked, the way of a man with a maid is past finding out, and ruses that might not seem likely to succeed do, as a matter of fact, succeed in a great number of cases.

BUILD NO MORE WARSHIPS
FOR TEN YEARS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The United States concrete proposal for limitation of armaments—the crux of the arms conference—was presented today by Secretary Hughes at the very opening of the first session. Briefly it is as follows:

A naval holiday in which all building should be abandoned and the older ships of present navies scrapped, was the keynote of the United States' proposal.

Mr. Hughes laid down four general principles:

1. That all capital shipbuilding programs, either actual or projected, should be abandoned.
2. That further reduction should be made through the scrapping of certain older ships.
3. That in general, regard should be had to the existing naval strength of the powers concerned.
4. That the capital ship tonnage should be used as the measurements of strength for navies and a proportionate allowance of auxiliary combatant craft prescribed.

For the United States the program would scrap all capital ships under construction, 15 in number and 15 of the older battleships.

For Great Britain

Great Britain would scrap construction on her four new ships of the Hood type and scrap all her second and first line battleships up to the King George V. class.

For Japan

Japan would abandon plans for two battleships and four battle cruisers not yet laid down, and in addition would scrap three capital ships and four battle cruisers in process of construction, and all ten of the pre-dreadnoughts and battleships of the second line.

No More for Ten Years

As a replacement program the United States proposed that no more ships be laid down for the next ten years and that a maximum replacement tonnage figure be fixed providing eventually for 500,000 tons for Great Britain, 500,000 tons for Japan, and 300,000 tons for the United States.

A proviso also would be included permitting replacement of capital ships when they were 20 years old and prohibiting construction of any ship built in replacement with a tonnage of more than 35,000 tons. The text of the proposal as it details concern the three leading naval powers is as follows:

United States

"The United States is now completing its program of 1916 calling for ten new battle ships and six battle cruisers. One battleship has been completed. The others are in various stages of construction; in some cases from 60 to 80 per cent. of the construction has been done. On these 15 capital ships now being built, over $330,000,000 has been spent. Still the United States is willing, in the interest of an immediate limitation of naval armaments, to scrap all these ships.

"The United States proposes, if this plan is accepted:

1. To scrap all capital ships now under construction. This includes six battle cruisers and seven battleships on the way and in the course of building and two battleships launched.

"The total number of new capital ships to be scrapped is 15. The total tonnage of the new capital ships when completed would be 618,000 tons.

2. To scrap all the older battleships up to, but not including, the Delaware and North Dakota. The number of these old battleships to be scrapped is 15. Their total tonnage is 227,740 tons.

"Thus the number of capital ships to be scrapped by the United States if this plan is accepted is 30, with an aggregate tonnage (including that of ships in construction, if completed) of 845,740 tons.

Japan

"It is proposed that Japan:

1. Shall abandon her program of ships not yet laid down, viz., the K-11, Owar, No. 7 and No. 8 battleships, and Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 battle cruisers.

"It should be observed that this does not involve the stopping of construction, as the construction of none of these ships has been begun.

2. Shall scrap three capital ships (the Matsui, launched, the Tosa and the Kago in course of building), and four battle cruisers (the Amagi and Akagi and Takao, not yet laid down, but for which certain material has been assembled).

"The total number of new capital ships to be scrapped under this program is seven, the total tonnage of these ships when completed would be 289,100 tons.

3. Shall scrap all pre-dreadnoughts and battleships of the second line. This would include the scrapping of all ships up to but not including the Setu; that is the scrapping of 10 old ships, with a total tonnage of 169,828.

Great Britain

1. Shall stop further construction of the four new Hoods, the new capital ships not laid down but upon which money has been spent. The four ships if completed would have a tonnage displacement of 172,000 tons.

2. Shall in addition scrap her pre-dreadnoughts, second line battleships and first line battleships, up to but not including the King George V. class.

"These, with certain pre-dread-

LOCAL COMMITTEE OF PROGRESSIVE PARTY
ADDRESSES MACLEOD ELECTORS IN INTERESTS
OF GEORGE G. COOTE, PROGRESSIVE NOMINEE IN THE MACLEOD FEDERAL RIDING

To the Citizens of the Town of Macleod: Ladies and Gentlemen,—In introducing the farmers' candidate to the Electors of the riding of Macleod in this Federal Election, we feel that there is due from us a few words addressed particularly to the citizens of Macleod.

The charge of class movement and class representation is frequently heard, and the fact that Mr. Coote was nominated at a gathering of farmers held in Macleod, at which the citizens had but little representation, seems to lend some color to the charge, and it is for this reason that we direct our remarks.

The plain fact is that if the farmers have entered the political field it is because they have been driven to do so, for many of them are today practically ruined.

Neither is this due, as some might suppose, entirely to crop failure, but rather to the economic system under which they have been working, buying in a closed market and selling in an open one, while the price of farm products has fallen below its cost of producing, and the price of those things which the farmer must buy in some cases maintains war levels, and it is no exaggeration to say that the farmers have reached the limit of their purchasing power. This we believe has been largely brought about because the Government fails to understand the position of the people and their real needs, while it has exercised a parental care over certain interests, and we believe that this impairment of the farmer's buying power is the cause of the business stagnation that prevails.

If the farmers have exercised care in the selection of their members it is not because they wish to be an exclusive body, or to usurp the power of government into their own hands; nevertheless in politics they are in-nights which it is understood have already been scrapped would amount to 19 capital ships and a tonnage reduction of 411,375 tons.

"The total tonnage of ships thus to be scrapped by Britain would be 583,375 tons."

Macleod G.W.V.A.
Will Put on Juvenile
Fancy Dress Ball

The G.W.V.A. of Macleod are putting on a juvenile fancy dress ball, to be held at the Veterans' Hall, Macleod, on Monday, Nov. 28th, from 7.30 to 11 p.m. The G.W.V.A. committee have arranged a splendid program of dances, and handsome prizes will be given for the following:

1. Best girl character costume.
2. Best boy character costume.
3. Boy or girl comic.

All school children in costume will be admitted free, while the general admission will be 50 cents.

It is to be hoped that parents will make a special effort to make this ball a success, and the idea of the success will be to have as many "kiddies" in costume as possible. Ryan's orchestra will supply the musical end of the program. Refreshments will be served at 9 o'clock. No adults will be allowed to dance.

Poppies Mark
Armistice Day
in Macleod

Macleod observed Armistice Day very quietly, but a touch was lent to the occasion not evident in previous years by the prevalence of the red poppy, of Flanders on the lapel of everybody's coat. Everybody was glad to mark the great day by buying a poppy from the taggers of the local war memorial. The proceeds of the sale of poppies amounted to $85.95. Great credit is due to the young ladies who worked so hard and successfully on the purveying of the little red emblem of Flanders.

At two minutes to 11 Friday morning the town whistle sounded the zero hour for the beginning of the two minutes of silence, which was observed fairly well in all sections of the town by the cessation of work and traffic.

Fines Under the Liquor Act

In Chief Ridley's police report for the town of Macleod for the month ending October 31st, 1921, there was shown $240.00 collected in fines for contravention of the Liquor Act.

Living in Austria is now 38 times as costly as in 1914?

experienced, and the prediction has been freely made that they would not hold together, and in the past many farmers' organizations have been wrecked by opening their doors too widely, and thus care has to be taken, although there are many good citizens whom the farmers would gladly welcome, and, contrary to general knowledge, the ranks of the U.F.A. have been, and still are, open to any person, regardless of his occupation, if the members are satisfied that the individual is in sympathy with their aims and objects, and, apart from all this, the farmers' organization is eager to co-operate with all who are of like mind with themselves for the common good.

It is conceded that if Canada is ever to meet her obligations, it must be by filling up her vacant lands with settlers, but instead of this our rural population is on the decline, and so it will remain until the land is made more attractive.

We do not throw down the principle of protection, but we do maintain that where protection is necessary the need should be placed before a committee of the House of Commons, whose sittings should be in public, and that such matters should not be settled behind closed doors.

We maintain that wider markets and a better system of marketing should obtain and that better trade relations should be cultivated with Great Britain. Our agricultural products are congested in our own markets, and what better market can be found than the industrial centres of Britain? But we cannot expect them to buy from us unless we are willing to take goods from them, and mean-while our merchant marine that has cost us seventy million dollars floats idly in the harbors.

Our platform is the creation of the people themselves, as it all originated in the local unions, and passed through the various stages until it was embodied in the new national policy, but it is now four years since it was formulated, and will of course have to be suited to the needs of the present day.

Considerable latitude should be given to members in order to meet the various circumstances that arise, but our ideal of representation is that members of parliament should first represent the people who elected them and not the opinions of party leaders.

Campaign funds are raised by a small levy on all members, which gives to the people a lively interest in public affairs and is also an educating influence. This, we contend, is far preferable to the old system of slush funds, as they were called, gathered from secret sources.

Speaking locally, we would refer to a pamphlet which has been sent far and wide among the people with the intent to injure Mr. Coote and the United Grain Growers. These pamphlets are neither headed, dated nor signed and thus lose much of their force. Why all this campaign of abuse? It is only a last resort, and the questions raised have already been answered.

There should be no conflict of interest between the people of the Town of Macleod and those of the surrounding country. In this address we have endeavored to briefly state some of our methods and ideals, and if these commend themselves to you, and if on the 6th of December the citizens of Macleod show by their votes their confidence in Mr. Coote, he will deem it a very great compliment indeed and will always endeavor to carry their best interests at heart.

Yours truly,
THE LOCAL COMMITTEE,
Progressive Party.

WERE THERE GIANTS IN THOSE TIMES?

The revival of the petrified giant industry in Tennessee or in any other state, suggests the gullibility of the public rather than the existence of giants in any period of recorded time. Even Og of Bashan, who is said, on the authority of Deuteronomy, to have slept in a bedstead between eleven and 13 feet in length, is rejected by the higher critics of the Scriptures as an improbability, and we are limited in our conception of the truth of Penny's description of the Arabian giants by a due realization of the probable imagination of the narrator. But there is no warrant in history or in archaeology for the supposition that the elder races were much taller or more powerful than are those of the present day.

The average present height of the human race is about 65 inches, but the average is produced by measuring both the races which are exceedingly tall and exceedingly short. The so-called gigantic races, of which the Scotch of Galloway still stand at the head, are offset by the little peoples of Central Africa, but, one century with another and one geological period with another, the same thing probably has been largely true. A few individuals have exceeded nine feet, according to authenticated records, but they have

HUGH SHAW
Meighen Government
Candidate in Macleod

H. M. Shaw, the government candidate for Macleod, came to Western Canada with his father in 1891. They settled in High River at that time. In 1893 Mr. Shaw attended high school in Calgary and later went back to engage in ranching in the High River district. In 1902 he went into business as a general merchant in Nanton and stayed with that line for three years. Since then he had been engaged in farming and ranching in that neighborhood. He was first elected to the Dominion house in the 1917 election as a Unionist.

invariably been freaks and do not justify the claim, now set forth by the alleged discoverers of a graveyard filled with petrified giants, that a race of giants ever walked the earth.

The giant legend is derived from the same source as the notion that everything deteriorates as time runs on. It is of one piece with the pessimistic idea that virtue and happiness and good works of every sort have been declining ever since the world was young. It was at first supposed that the first men on earth were necessarily tall and mighty, because it also was supposed that everything was going down hill.

"There were giants in those times" was in reality a way of saying that men were not as great as they previously had been. But a more modern view is that the stature of races is due, not only to nature, but to nurture, and it is conceded that man was never so well nurtured as he is today. It is infinitely more probable that man in the distant future will be a giant than that such ever existed in a previous age.—Oregonian.

AIRPLANES IN THE NAVY

Before the air fleet can accompany the sea fleet there must be operating bases which can move as fast as the fastest cruisers. These moving bases, known as airplane carriers, form one in the most interesting and startling innovations of modern warfare.

As the name indicates, they carry the airplane, seaplane, torpedoplane, and in some cases the gas-filled airship, along with the fleet, and are constructed in such manner that the aerial fighters can "take off," "land on" and "live on" their spacious accommodation. What the port is to an ocean liner, so is the landing field to an airplane. The airplane carrier is an ocean landing field.

Your carrier must be fitted to carry aircraft and be able to put them in the air immediately upon request, and must furnish, in addition to its own crew, living quarters for the aviators, storerooms for the spare parts, gasoline, oil, etc., photographic and meteorological offices, magazines for bombs, torpedoes, machine-gun ammunition, parachute flares, and a host of other things. In short, the carrier must have every facility that exists at a first-class airfield on the land, in addition to having runs big enough to fight off submarines, destroyers and fast cruisers, plus mobility and speed sufficient to keep up with the fastest units of the rest of the fleet.

The matter of speed is most important, since the airplane is the eye of the army and navy and the cavalry of the fleet.

One airplane carrier should accompany each division of battleships (consisting of four or five dreadnoughts), and one airplane carrier should accompany each division of battle-cruisers (consisting of three vessels); each carrier should maintain forty-eight planes and twenty bombing or torpedo planes.—Horse Green in Leslie's.

A REQUEST

When the last call comes from the great unknown,
The call we all must obey,
Just lay me to rest, far away and alone—
Away where King Nature holds sway.

Gaunt grey mountains my mourners will be—
So rugged and solid and grim,
And the soft breeze through an old pine tree
Shall sound my funeral hymn.

My grave a vault of clean white stone
Covered with wreaths of snow;
In peace I'll remain forever alone
Where the mountain goats pass to and fro.

Find me a man, clean, honest and fair,
Whether parson or scholar or tramp,
Let him read the last rites o'er my remains there
Where my tired old body will camp.

And the old tears I want to be shed
Are those so trusted and tried—
The undefined waters from snowcaps o'erhead,
Tumbling over the mountain side.

My hearse shall be a litter of boughs
Holding the scent of the pines—
Then carry my body near to the snows
To rest within Nature's confines.

Take me far, far away from the ran-
cor and rant,
From false friends and hypocrites too,
With falseness so rank, religion and cant—
Let me rest with the real things—the true.

Back, back to Nature, Godlike and clean,
Back to the wilds where its rest,
Far from the world and the cares that have been—
Peace, peace with all Nature—its best.

When my spirit is ready to hover above
With the things that are pure, the things that God love—
There the sins of the world I'll atone.

VICTORIAN
AT AUCTION

Next May the treasures collected by the late Baroness Burdett-Coutts will be sold and it is probable that some record prices will be obtained. This is in accord with the will of Mr. Burdett-Coutts, who has made such a disposal of his vast property as his wife would have desired. The chief heir is his nephew, Major Seabury Ashmead-Barrett, who distinguished himself in the war. One of the conditions is that Major Barrett change his name to Burdett-Coutts, as did the testator, who was William Lehman Ashmead-Barrett before becoming the husband of the distinguished lady whose almoner and secretary he had been for years. There are bequests to the nation of historic paintings and various gifts and remembrances to old friends of the Baroness, and a great number of annuities to various charities. Despite these deductions the residue of the estate to be sold is a vast one, and the treasures to be sold at auction are in some respects unique.

A Friend of Victoria's

In describing some of the articles Mr. J. P. Collins speculates in the Boston Transcript as to the reason Mr. Lytton Strachey did not include Baroness Burdett-Coutts in his list of eminent Victorians, for certainly she was an eminent Victorian in every sense of the word. Mr. Strachey's particular interest in Queen Victoria might surely have suggested to him the propriety of writing a sketch of the woman who was about the last of the Queen's intimate personal friends, and perhaps the only one of them who was permitted to meet her in terms of entire equality. To the home of the Baroness with its view of Buckingham Palace, the Queen used often to repair for the purpose of conversation and also to see the traffic of London "in its natural condition," as she was wont to say, because whenever she went through the streets the traffic was halted and banked aside.

A Shakespeare First Folio

Perhaps the chief prize of the collection which will be offered for sale is the Daniel First Folio of Shakespeare, so called because it belonged to a collector named Daniel. When the collection was broken up in 1864 there was a public outcry for fear it should find its way to the United States, for about that time the American invasion of the British world of art was beginning. In response to this clamor, rather than because she took any particular interest in the folio, the Baroness purchased it for the then record-breaking price of £716.2.0. According to Sir Sidney Lee, the great authority in this field, the Daniel folio, is on the whole the clearest and finest extant, and the Times' expert speaks of it as "a marvellous volume of unrivalled beauty, unquestionably the finest that can ever occur for public sale."

Great Prices Expected

Queen Victoria was touched by the public spirit shown by the Baroness and had a basket made from the wood of Herne's Oak in Windsor forest, the tree that is with Falstaff the centre of the fairy pranks in the last scene of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." In this basket the folio resides when not being inspected. How much this folio will fetch can only be guessed at, but Mr. Collins puts the figure in round numbers as "a king's ransom." There is another first folio in the collection known as the Sheldon copy, which ought also to fetch a great price. There is a perfect copy of a first edition of Shakespeare's "Poems," which contains a memorandum of some long dead book collector to the effect that he had been induced to part with five shillings and three pence for this treasure, which will probably change hands for several thousand pounds.

Great China Collection

Among the manuscripts are holographs of Pope's "Pastorals," and the manuscripts of Dickens' Christmas story, "The Hound of the Baskin's." Probably Dickens took no such pains over any of his work as over his Christmas stories, and this manuscript shows corrections and interlineations to the extent of fifty or seventy per cent. of the original draft. The china collection is probably one of the finest in the world, for the Baroness took a particular interest in it, and, of course, money was no object when she desired to make a purchase. There is a Sevres set that is probably unequalled. Many of the services and pieces are of historic interest, there being one that was used for years by David Garrick. There is also some rare plate of the finest quality, which passed into the hands of Thomas Coutts at the time he was the banker for the English nobility and who thus came into possession of treasures pledged with him for loans which the debtors could never repay.

ARE WE THANKFUL?

"John! John! Wake up! Oh, John, what is it? Has the war come?"

Her husband sat bolt upright in bed, tried to shake the sleep out of his brain and collect his semi-slumbering senses. The dark of a chill November morning, long before dawn, was throbbing with the clang of bells. Then it was pierced by steam whistles, some shrill, some hoarse. In the intervals the shouts of men gathering volume into united cheers. The notes of a bugle rang sweet through the clamor.

"John, what does it mean? Has the war come?"

"No," replied John as it dawned on his mind, and he made a mad spring from the bed; "the war is done! The armistice is signed. I'm for down town."

He leaped at his trousers, got one leg into both drawers and trousers, and the other into the trousers only, leaving the drawer's leg hanging along side. What odds? Peace had come. He got one brace over a shoulder but forgot that there was another. Who cared? Not he! He pulled on one of his own short grey woolen socks, and one of his wife's long black silk stockings. What's the diff? He was going down town. Fortunately he got the long stocking on the leg minus the drawers and so didn't get rheumatism. He didn't wait for a collar or tie, nor to lace up his boots. He just gave the laces a hitch around the top of the boots and sloped off. Who was going to look? It was peace!

What a day he had! He and his next door neighbor were bad friends, because he had reported the neighbor's boy to the police for stealing his apples. They met at the neighbor's gate, shook hands, clapped each other on the back, danced around each other and ended up by hugging each other like sentimental schoolgirls. A fat woman ran into him as he rounded the corner and threw her — No, we'll not tell what she did, because we never tell on a woman. But it was all right whatever she did, for she had lost one son already and had two more at the front. John didn't object the least to what she did.

The maid at the big house on the next corner was waving a white nightgown out of an attic window, it being the nearest thing to a flag of truce she could lay her hands on. John and the neighbor and the fat woman cheered her as they passed along.

By the time he reached the front street it was full of citizens, shaking hands, laughing, crying, running to the newspaper office to feed their eyes again on the big scrawny bulletin. Men were there who were less dressed than he; women with cloaks buttoned close over a minimum of attire; school girls who hadn't taken time even to adjust their cootie garages. And everybody was so happy and friendly. Even the gouty, important citizen who had never before vouchsafed more than a grunt to John's cheery greetings, shook both his hands as if he were a long lost brother.

Then the church bells called to thanksgiving. John went gladly. He had never been at church at such an hour before. But it looked good to him. He was glad to join in their hymns, glad to echo the prayers, glad to read a psalm of thanksgiving, glad that the minister was too glad to preach. Never was such a service! And then it was short and he got out in time to see a leading citizen riding through the streets on a grey horse with his face turned to the horse's tail and he beating a drum perched on the horse's hips to the time of no tune that ever was in heaven or earth or on the sea. It was all fine. Who cared what he did. He was happy. So were we. Let him go to it.

How thankful we were! No more ghastly bulletins of battles! No more lines staggering back under the weight of overwhelming masses! No more columns and columns of casualties, wounded, killed, missing—oh, the horrible suspense! No more flags drooping at half-mast! No more terrible yellow missives with their messages of death! And soon the boys will be home.

That was three years ago. Now for three years we have had all the things for which we were so thankful that day; all the things for which we had prayed for more than four years. Do we ever stop to thank God for that great gift of peace? Peace! Peace with the boys at home, and no fear of the telegraph messenger or the minister when he appears at the door. Peace! Let all our petty ills and complaining be forgotten and let us be glad and thankful just for peace, as we were that day.

The Rhyming Optimist

A SUGGESTION

(By Aline Michaelis.)

Oh, when a man is much in love he has a sort of blindness; he swears his sweetheart is a dove, whatever her unkindness. He talks about her golden hair (she has peroxide tresses), and dwells upon her artless air (she wears Parisian dresses). With ladies, too, it's just the same: unwon, her love's a wonder, but versed in matrimony's game, she tells him: "Go to thunder!" Yes, once the shackles are secure upon Friend Hubby's ankles, he hears the truth, unvarnished, pure, however much it rankles. Algernon once made such a hit with love-lorn Anastasia, she thought that all he did was it, but now her words amaze you. Time was she held him up as great to all her friends an dousins, but now she does not hesitate to name his faults by dozens. She finds he sometimes sips his tea; she claims his ears are floppy; he often slurs his final "n" and keeps his clothing sloppy. Alas! it ever has been thus; in courtship all is charming, but after marriage folks can fuss with ease that's most alarming. So it might be a wiser way if we reversed our wooing, and courted as in cave-man's day and later did the cooing. Perhaps if truth were sometimes told before the church would hitch us, love would not half so soon grow cold and run away and ditch us.

UNHAPPY MEDIUM

Housekeeper: "You're a big, healthy man; why don't you go to work? Tramp! Lady, I'll tell yer me trouble; I'm an 'unhappy medium.' What do you mean by that?" Well, you see, I'm too heavy for light work and too light for heavy work.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT'S RELIGIOUS BELIEFS

Readers of the article in this column about Tumulty's biographical sketch of Woodrow Wilson may have been scandalized to learn that on one occasion while Mr. Wilson was filling the high office of President of the United States he used the words, "I don't care a damn." The dissemination of the fact that Mr. Wilson could unobscure himself of an oath must cause a reversal of public opinion concerning him. We should have thought Mr. Roosevelt more likely to be a moderately swearing man, but have just come across an article dealing with Roosevelt and Religion, which dispels this idea. It is not positively asserted that Roosevelt never swore, but those who knew him most intimately testify that he never took the name of God in vain, and that at least he was a profoundly religious man regular in the performance of his church duties and abhorring atheism and atheism from the bottom of his heart.

A Churchgoer

William Allen White of Kansas, a friend of Roosevelt's, said that he arrived in Emporia at 2 a.m. at the end of a wearisome campaign tour but was up early to go to church. He avoided the big, popular church and hunted out his own denomination, the Dutch Reformed, which was housed in a tiny building. He sang with delight his favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," which, by the way, was the only hymn sung at his funeral. He knew many hymns by heart and found great pleasure in singing them devoutly, standing with his hands behind his back and finding a hymnbook superfluous. A particular favorite was Luther's battle hymn, "Ein Feste Berg," which he sang in the German language. In one of his letters it is recorded that he used to give a cash prize of five cents to each of his children who memorized a hymn.

Reader of the Bible

He was also a great reader of the Bible, and the fact is not generally known that for years he was a Sunday school teacher. Before going to Harvard he taught a class for three years in one of the missions founded by his father. He was asked to resign from this class by the clergyman, who learned that he had commended one of his pupils for thrashing a youth who had spoken slightly of his sister. He quit the school, but found another and resumed teaching. When he was a boy he visited Bill Sewall at one of his Maine camps, and Mr. Sewall recalls that he used to spend a couple of hours on Sunday reading his Bible. Mrs. Roosevelt wrote to the American Bible Society: "I should like the world to know that his deep knowledge of the Bible played in my husband's life." Roosevelt said: "The teachings of the Bible are so interwoven in the life of the nation that if it were removed we should lose almost all of the standards by which we now judge both public and private morals." Again, he remarked: "Our success in striving to help our fellow men depends largely upon our success as we strive to lead our lives in accordance with the ethical principles laid down in the life of Christ and in the New Testament, writings which seek to expound and apply His teachings."

The Single Standard

He made a public profession of religion early in life, feeling as he said that "if a man believes these things he ought to say so." He was a most attentive listener to sermons, and rarely came away from a service without stopping to shake hands with the minister and offer some comment upon what he had heard. He believed in a single standard of morals for men and women, and once requested the members of his cabinet to give no social notice to anyone who was mixed up in a salacious divorce case. He refused to entertain Maxim Gorky when the Russian visited the United States, accompanied by a lady who was far from being his wife. While police commissioner in New York he insisted that men who were arrested in raids upon disreputable houses should receive the same punishment as their women companions.

Off-Color Stories

Sometimes people who met him for the first time thought he would enjoy stories a trifle off color, but whenever anyone would start such an anecdote the colonel would turn his back upon him and walk away. This was his equivalent to Queen Victoria's devastating "We are not amused," of which Lytton Strachey has told us. Once he accosted a gun-using cowboy with the remark: "Jim, I like you, but you are the nastiest-looking man I ever heard of." Jim, instead of taking a pot-shot at him, is said to have blushed and apologized. As regards his religious beliefs, he seldom discussed them, because he thought too many reformers had used church membership and professed piety as a cloak for crookedness. On one occasion he was found praying over the grave of former President McKinley and none of his beliefs was firmer than in the efficacy of prayer.

To Wear To School

(By Rita Stuyvesant)

The opening of school means new frocks for the kiddies, for by this time it is a little too cool for the late summer clothing, which is probably pretty well worn after a strenuous summer of play days. But children grow so rapidly that few mothers care to invest a large amount in clothes for school children, and there are many clever ways of making over frocks and suits from the adult to suit the needs of the child.

Perhaps you have a wool jersey sport suit from the summer or spring and have decided to wear the jacket yourself with a plaid skirt. Why not make over the jersey skirt into a smart frock for the school child? One woman whose children are always well dressed showed me a sleeveless jumper dress of Harding blue jersey that was formerly a skirt. The edges were bound in silk braid, and with it was worn a dainty gimp of white dainty. Almost any skirt will cut a dress of this kind, and there is nothing more becoming or smart at the present time.

A black and white checked skirt of mother's was ripped apart, pressed and re-cut into an attractive side-pleated skirt for a child of seven. A black velvet overblouse, with white linen Bramley collar and cuffs, was worn with this checked skirt.

A tweed suit that is perhaps out of style will make an excellent top-coat for a school child. This should be cut on simple lines, with raglan sleeves and a roll collar, and the front might be double-breasted.

Bone buttons in a matching shade are used on tweed. If you find buttonholes a bit tedious to make on the tweed you might have your tailor do them for you; also the first pressing of the garment.

Black velvet, satin, crepe or taffeta may all be made into charming frocks for dressy occasions, and these, to be fashionable, must be cut on the simple lines of a chemise and have a round collar and cuffs of white. Or, gandy, edged with Irish lace, is quaint and there are many dainty sets that one may purchase all ready to use in crochet and knit. A big sash tied in the back makes a picturesque finish. Capes are adorable for little ones just starting to school, and if one has a circular skirt she may easily cut a cape. It may be lined or not, ac-

INTERNAL BATHING, NATURE TREATMENT FOR CONSTIPATION

You can help Nature in Nature's most effectual way by internal bathing, and without the use of drugs, keep the lower intestine in the clean condition which Nature demands for good health and vigor. Thousands of Canadians testify to the benefit derived from its use in cases of obstinate constipation, piles, indigestion, appendicitis and hardening of the arteries.

Frank Stanton of Port Stanton, Ont., writes:

"I must say that your 'J.B.L. Cascade' has been a great value to me, and I feel indebted to the inventor of this treatment since I have made use of your wonderful discovery. I feel twenty years younger and have not taken medicine of any sort."

The J. B. L. Cascade used with sterilized warm water, is easy and pleasant in its effects. You bathe outside why not bathe internally, too—it is far more important.

The J. B. L. Cascade is the perfected invention of Dr. Charles A. Tyrrell for Internal Bathing. It is now being shown and explained at A. D. Ferguson's drug store, Macleod, Alberta.

Ask them for free booklet all about it—or write to Tyrrell's Hygienic Institute, 103 College Street, Toronto.

Betelgeuse is over 4,000 times the size of the sun, which is about 10,000 times the size of the earth, which contains over 260,000,000 cubic miles, each cubic mile capable of containing, on a reasonable estimate, over 14,507,000,000 people—all of which leads to the conclusion that Betelgeuse is about 1,530,880,000,000,000,000,000,000 times the size of the average observer—if statistics interest you:

THE POOR LITTLE PRINCE

Part Sixteen

As soon as the little prince had satisfied himself that the story had made the tender-hearted sister cry, he started right on again with the adventures of the sea-lizard.

"Now," he went on, "you can be sure the sea-lizard was not satisfied with staying in the pail in the cellar, for it was a high-spirited little lizard. It made up its mind that it was going to get home to its mother at the bottom of the sea in time for its birthday next Thursday. But as that was just a week off how could it accomplish this task, for the pail of water was miles and miles away from the sea."

I wonder how it could accomplish it?" the sister who liked to have problems worked out, asked herself aloud.

The little prince's heart leaped for joy. One more step had been taken successfully. He had given that sister a problem to work out in her mind. Now to make the other sister laugh.

The little prince went right on with his story. By wiggling himself up the side of the pail the little sea lizard reached the top and then wiggled down the outside until he landed on the basement floor. He was a very tiny lizard, but by striving quite hard he climbed the basement stairs and found his way into the kitchen. There he spied the kitchen maid dumping pails of warm water into the sink.

"Lucky water," said the kitchen maid. "You are quite warm now, but you will run down the drains into the river and then on to the cool sea. What lucky warm water you are!"

So that sink leads to the sea, thought the little lizard, and straightway he started to climb up the sink. But just when he got to the top of it he discovered that the kitchen maid had been pouring hot water down the sink so it was too warm for him, so he climbed up and got into the nozzle of the cold water tap. When the cold water was turned on he would have a nice cool ride to the sea, he believed.

Just then the kitchen maid found herself quite overcome with thirst. She turned on the cold water tap. "Oh, ooh, oh!" she cried as she spied the lizard. "The house is bewitched. There are sea serpents in the water tap," and she ran away, crying out at the top of her voice, leaving the tap running so hard that the lizard was washed into the drains.

At this point in the story the third sister burst into a hearty peal of laughter, so amused was she at the fright of the kitchen maid.

"There," cried the little prince, "I have broken your spell. I have caused one sister to cry and given the second a problem to work out and have made the other sister laugh."

"So you have," the sisters cried in chorus, "but please finish the story. There is no more to tell," the little prince answered, "except that the sea lizard was carried down to its home in the sea, where it was received with joy in time for its birthday party."

Former Macleod Man Victim of Fatal Accident

Badly burned in a High River garage on Saturday, Thomas Wellington Hamilton, aged 32, died in the High River hospital on Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock. The remains were taken to Lethbridge for burial on Wednesday afternoon.

The late Mr. Hamilton was well known in many of the towns of Southern Alberta. For a time after coming from his birthplace at Emerson, Man., he resided at Cardston. For several months after this he was in partnership with Mr. Maclean in a battery re-charging business on 24th Street, Macleod, after which he took over the Service Garage (formerly Ford Garage), which latter business he ran until going to High River. He had many friends in Macleod who were greatly shocked to hear of his death, and express their deepest sympathy with his relatives.

The Man of the Hour

In this hour of Canada's most acute national crisis, the country's greatest need is leadership—not class leadership, not sectional leadership, but NATIONAL leadership. A pilot must be chosen possessing the necessary courage, foresight, breadth of vision and determination to lead the nation safely out of the existing economic uncertainty.

And one man stands out head and shoulders above all others as pre-eminently fitted for the task.

Born on a farm near St. Mary's, Ontario, Arthur Meighen is a true son of the people, a toiler who has fought his way to eminence by sheer ability and force of intellect. Entered Parliament in 1908; appointed Solicitor-General in 1914; Minister of the Interior in 1917; and Prime Minister in 1920.

At the Imperial Conference he was acclaimed by the Press of Great Britain as a great statesman, as a strong, virile, vigorous personality—alert in mind, keen and far-seeing in judgment, and with a fearless determination to stand for the right.

Professor A. D. Skelton, of Queen's University, and biographer of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, wrote of the present Prime Minister:—"He has already given proof of high administrative capacity. His personal integrity is beyond question."

Of himself, Arthur Meighen said to his constituents the other day:—"You know where I stood on this issue in 1908, in 1911, and as in 1911 I stand to-day."

THE NEXT GREAT NEED

The rapid progress that is being made with the construction of the works of the Lethbridge Northern system, the preparation for beginning work on the United District, the organization of the South Macleod and other projects are all reminders of the fact that other things will be necessary besides the provision of the water to make these irrigation districts the success they are undoubtedly capable of being made. that are now being cultivated by dry farming methods will not alone make possible the production of crop in sufficient quantity to enable the owners of these lands to meet their obligations and make a good living as well. The success of these projects will only be obtained by the fullest advantage being taken of the irrigation water when it is available. This means that every acre than can possibly be irrigated shall be producing crops which in turn means more farmers on the land and smaller farms.

This problem of the division of the comparatively large areas at present being farmed into smaller farms, the settlement of the surplus areas is the next and greatest problem the irrigation districts in Southern Alberta have to face. It was thoroughly discussed at the Convention of the Western Canada Irrigation Association at Vernon, British Columbia, last July. Mr. Charlesworth dealt with it in his address on irrigation districts, a report of which appears in this issue, as also did Mr. Marnoch, Mr. Griffin and other speakers. The problem is one that the districts will not be able to solve satisfactorily of themselves and government assistance will be necessary. It is, therefore, very gratifying to note that the matter has the attention and sympathy of the Government of Alberta and that an announcement may shortly be expected with regard to the co-operation the government will be able to render in its solution.

QUAINT JAPANESE LAWS

It is almost impossible for the Western mind to grasp the vastness of the changes wrought in Japan during the past sixty years. Before the present Mikado's father abolished the sumptuary laws, for instance, no Japanese could eat a meal, ride in a conveyance or wear a garment without considering whether the law might be offended. Whatever a man's rank, he might not have more than two kinds of soup and six other dishes at his meals, and minute regulations were enforced as to the quantity of sake allowed at an official banquet, the number of cups being graded according to the drinker's rank. A nobleman, even of the highest rank, was not permitted to spend more than $40 on a dress for his wife.

My Secrets Of Charm

(By Marilyn Miller.)

There is no mark of age so tell-tale as the double chin. Every woman, as she approaches the dangerous age when the muscles of her face begin to sag, should bear in mind that the double chin will be the result unless she takes the proper precautions in time.

First of all neck exercise is most important. Every morning when you rise, stand before your open window and throw the head as far back as possible. Bend it forward slowly, then to the right until it almost touches the right shoulder, bending low to the left, back around, bending low to the left shoulder, an downward again. Repeat this movement several times until you get a circular motion. The stretching of the side muscles of the neck will develop the circulation there and tend to tighten them up.

Thoroughly cleanse the neck with a good brand of cleansing cream. Then cover its surface with a quantity of heavy massage cream, using just enough to smooth evenly over the entire surface of the neck. Throw the head back, then turn it to the right. Begin with the section of the neck just below the chin and smooth the neck down in a gentle, rotary motion with the palm of the hand. Repeat this motion on the other side of the neck with the head to the back and neck. Gradually work the fingers in straight columns down the neck, always being sure to work down and never up, until the fingers reach the column that extends from the earlobe to the shoulder.

This part of the neck is especially important, as here lies some of the glands that are apt to cause what appears to be a double chin and what in reality may be swelling of the glands. If there is any soreness experienced when you massage this part of your neck, consult your physician at once. It may be that your glands are not functioning properly and causing the unnecessary swelling that appears like an excess of neck tissue, or it may be that your tonsils are causing the swollen appearance. In either case it is most important that you see your physician and let him examine the throat thoroughly for any such symptoms.

Sleeping without a pillow helps to correct the excess of tissue that forms the double chin.

The nerve centres of the facial nerves are situated just below and forward of the ear lobes on either side of the face. Here all the minute telegraph wires that cause sensation over the face are held together, and here is where the cure for sagging muscles of the face is affected. Those tired lines from the nose to the centres of the mouth and from the mouth down may be brought up into place and the expression made more restful, and therefore beautiful, if a few moments each day are devoted to massaging the nerves. Care must be taken not to press these delicate centres too hard. They must be touched very lightly, with a circular movement and only with the tips of the forefinger and middle finger on each hand.

The "patting" process being used in up-to-the-minute beauty parlors may be practiced at home.

Because the "patting" treatment is merely to stimulate the circulation of this section, it is recommended for a double purpose. It breaks down excess tissue and the blood carries it off. It also builds up tissue on the neck that is inclined to be scrawny by bringing to it the proper nourishment through the quickly flowing blood that passes under its surface. When the patting is finished, and usually a treatment is successful when the neck appears reddened, a nourishing massage cream is worked into the skin and allowed to remain there for twenty minutes.

A WORD FOR AUTUMN

Nay, say not that Autumn's a monster
Who comes but to kill and destroy.
To lay bloody fingers and cruel
On all of life's beauty and joy.
Say rather, that after the turmoil
And labor and head of the day,
He kindles the fire on the hearthstone
That soothes all our troubles away.

To quiet our pulses and chill—

PASS THE APPLES

When every pool in Eden was a mirror
That unto Eve her dainty charms proclaimed,
She went undraped without a single fear
Thought that she had need to be ashamed.

'Twas only when she'd eaten of the apple
That she became inclined to be a prude,
And found that everyone she'd have to grapple
With the much-debated problem of the nude.

Thereafter she devoted her attention,
Her time and all her money to her clothes,
And that was the beginning of Convention,
And Modesty as well, I do suppose.

Reactions come about in fashions recent,
Now girls conceal so little from the men,
It would seem in the name of all that's decent,
Someone ought to pass the apples 'round again.

A CAT-ASTROPHE

Some years ago in a provincial music hall a comedian was in the middle of his "patter" when the house cat leaped onto the stage and sat at his feet.

He stopped and gazed down at the cat with great gravity.

"Look here, pussy," he said, "you have made some mistake, I think. This is a monologue, not a catalogue."

What though the strife's not always fair,

They have no further strength for smiting;
The fools who say: "What chance is there?
Life is a rotten cheat, a snare!"

Alexander Karageorgevitch was one of those comic opera sovereigns we used to hear about in the old days of trouble-in-the-Balkans. But he was crowned King of Serbia the other day—and the mightier monarchs are still in exile.

A Detroit restaurateur was fined $17 for hitting a man in the face with a plateful of griddle cakes. And a lot of people wouldn't charge a cent for being hit in the face with griddle cakes.

The Three Keatons. He was sixteen years in vaudeville, playing all over the United States and Canada and most of the big cities of Europe. Metro advanced him to stardom in the belief that he is the coming comedian of the screen. The producers feel that his work in "The Saphhead" has justified this belief. At present he is under contract to play in a series of slapstick comedies, but he is expected in the future to return to roles of the sort he plays in "The Saphhead."

In "The Saphhead" he is co-star with William H. Crane. Others in the cast include Irvine Cummings, Edward Connelly, Odette Tyler and Beulah Booker.

The production is presented by John L. Golden and Winchell Smith in conjunction with Marcus Loew, with F. H. Webster as art director and Harold Wenstrom as cameraman.

PAWNED GOBLET LED GIRL TO ROMANCE

Some people get more than others when they take their dearest possession to the pawnshop to get a loan. Mary Malloy, for instance, got trouble, but the trouble led to romance. Mary Malloy is the little Cinderella heroine of "The Magic Cup," Constance Binney's latest Reelart picture. The story is from the pen of E. Lloyd Sheldon and deals with the adventures of a cheery little kitchen maid in a New York hotel.

She is an orphan and her one valuable possession is an old silver goblet left by her mother, who had told her always to keep it, as it was a family heirloom.

Mary doesn't know much about family trees, but she knows a lot about poverty and more than once she has temporarily surrendered her treasure cup to the pawn broker to get money to help some of her friends worse off than herself.

There comes a day when a notorious crook sees Mary in the pawnshop, recognizes the crest on her silver cup as that of a distinguished British family, and frames a plot to "restore" the girl to a bogus grandfather and use her as an unconscious tool in the big fake jewel deal.

How this plot almost succeeds and is foiled in the nick of time by a cub reporter who cables the real family and accidentally restores Mary to her real grandfather, makes a pleasant and wholesome story which provides clean entertainment for old and young, as Constance Binney's pictures always do. "The Magic Cup" will open at the Empress Theatre here next Friday for a two-day run.

"THE INVISIBLE DIVORCE"
LOOKS FEARLESSLY INTO THE PEEPHOLES OF LIFE

Could you still be a wife to a man who loved another woman? This question is the theme of a photoplay that looks fearlessly at life, "The Invisible Divorce," a National Picture which is to be shown at the Empress Theatre Thursday of next week.

This production finds a new peephole into that corner of life into which so many people stray, but in this instance it probes the sort of divorce that never reaches the headlines of a newspaper. When a divorce would mean scandal and notoriety and when the wife and husband live together with that wall of disillusionment between them, then comes suffering more intense than the divorce cases we read about.

A magnificent cast including Walter McGrail, beautiful Leatrice Joy, Grace Darmond, Walter Miller and Tom Bates makes this picture a real screen event.

THE MAGIC CUP

A pear necklace that was real, and its clever imitation; a nobleman who was genuine, and a crook who was impersonating him—how was bewildered little Mary to know the genuine from the false? The old silver goblet gave the clue which solved the mystery. See this play at the Empress Friday and Saturday.

Bobbie and His Pa

(By William F. Kirk.)

Our teacher was telling us something with a poet rote, it went like this

Lives of grate men oft remind us
We can make our own sublime
& departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time

I asked Pa how we could leave our footprints behind us & Pa said Well, Bobbie, sed Pa, you mean footprints. Never say footprints. Footprints sounds as clumsy as Crowsnips, sed Pa. The gent with rote that bitful epigram was old Hank Longfeller, sed Pa, as good a poet as ever put the bee on a editor, sed Pa.

I wish you would speak moar proper English wen you are talking to Bobbie, sed Ma. Children pick up slang fast enough on the street, sed Ma, without larning it from thare own fathers.

You are rite as you sumtimes are sed Pa. Bobbie, sed Pa, you shud lern that little verse by hart & say it often, sed Pa. We have but a short time on this old earth, sed Pa, & it is up to us to do the moast we can with our time. The nite is cumming for us al! & only fatheads shirk and stall, sed Pa. That sounds kind of like Hank Longfellow, too, sed Pa.

My father always spoke like that about im-prooving our time, sed Ma. My deer old dad never wasted a hour that I know of, sed Ma.

He never overlooked any bets, that old gink, sed Pa. What do you mean? Jest what do you mean? sed Ma. Ma was looking at Pa like she looks at the butcher wen he brings the rong kind of bacon.

I mean that you're father had a vary aktive mind, sed Pa. He never was at a loss.

That is better, sed Ma. Quite offen you have made remarks, sed Ma, that wud make me think you are trying to B-little my father. If Nater ever made a Nobleman she made one the day she made my father.

Yure father must have felt kind of swelled up to have the saim birth-

WHEN MAIDENS VOTE

(By A. C. Wood.)

She paused—the pencil in her hand,
The ballot there before her—
A look of indecision crept
Her pretty features over.

It was her first—her maiden vote—
And she was tender-hearted;
She sighed and from her azure eyes
The tear-drops nearly started.

She looked the ballot o'er again,
Her loving heart, it fluttered,
The pencil in her fingers shook,
Her cherry lips they muttered:

"That Grit is such a handsome mar,
And I just love that Tory—
If one had been a single man,
'Twould be another story."

"For tariffs low or tariffs high
Who would care to fuss and stew—
Bah, ah, to vote for only one,
Seems a cruel thing to do."

A smile o'erspread her charming face,
Chasing shadows dense away,
She knew the proper thing to do
And went about it blithe and gay.

She marked the ballot, marked it plain—
Candidly, to tell I'm loth,
For this is what the maiden did:
Voted, yes, she did, for both.

THE LATE SIR JOHN KENNEDY: AN APPRECIATION

Sir John Kennedy, the great engineer, who died on October 25th, full of years and honors, found the port of Montreal a shallow roadstead and a haphazard aggregation of primitive wharves, a few feet above the water level, when he in 1875 was appointed chief engineer to the Montreal Harbor Commission. The port was a thousand miles from ocean water, and one-fifth of this distance, separating Montreal from Quebec, was a narrow, tortuous and in places dangerous channel, only 20 feet in depth, limiting its navigation to river and lake craft and the smaller of the ocean-going steamers of the day. Added to this handicap was the fact that the river at Montreal contained strong and tricky currents which increased the difficulties of entering and leaving the port, while each spring the harbor exposed to the possibilities of serious floods, which not only wrought damage to the wharves and other shipping facilities but also at intervals covered wide expanses of the city's lower level, causing great inconvenience and loss to the city.

These were the conditions existing when Sir John, then plain Mr. Kennedy, came from the Great Western railway to take over the task of making Montreal an ocean port which should prove not only third in importance in America, but rank high among the world's greatest harbors, but in some features set the lead for all others. Fated to lose his physical sight fifteen years prior to his death and before the monumental work which he planned was fully carried out, he possessed from the beginning to the end of his life that vision of genius which sees design and achievement as one. A practical visionary, he might be called. When he spoke of piers one thousand feet in length Montreal the scornful jeered, yet to day ocean liners and freighters from all the seven seas lie at these piers. He built a breakwater one and one-half miles in length, averted forever the menace of havoc by floods and moderated the influence of the currents. Sir John himself designed dredges of a new type to meet the demands made by the engineering and geological difficulties to be overcome both in harbor and in the river channel to Quebec, which under his direction was deepened to 27 feet and made as safe for navigation allowing for the fallible human equation as the traditional mill-pond.

For the first five or more years of his connection with the port of Montreal, Sir John worked under the direction of a harbor commission comprising representatives of various bodies and shipping interests. While much good work was done, there was a strong tendency to log-rolling among the commissioners, each one being anxious to advance the cause of his own particular interest rather than to serve the general welfare of the city and country. This fact was recognized by the brilliant and energetic though erratic, Hon. Israel Tarte when he was minister of public works and on his insistence the Laurier government made a clean sweep of the old board and created the present form of commission, composed of three members chosen for their practical business ability, disinterestedness and general standing in the community. In place of the more or less spasmodic system of improvements which had been in force the new commission had Sir John Kennedy prepare a comprehensive scheme of development to be carried out over a long term of years, and this project, with but few modifications, was approved by the Dominion government and is still in process of accomplishment as finances permit and shipping and trade conditions demand. Perhaps a decade or more may pass before it is fully completed, but Sir John, becoming sightless before he was 70 and dying at the age of 83 saw enough of it completed to prove to the full his skill, his judgment and his vision of the future.

Although only 37 years old when he became chief engineer to the Montreal commission, Sir John was already known as a leader in his profession, and he had had wide experience in railways, mining, waterworks and other branches of engineering. His reputation continued to grow; he became recognized among his fellows as an authority upon engineering practice, and he was frequently called upon to advise upon large undertakings, both in and outside of Canada, by government, public and corporation bodies. In his personal demeanor, modest, approachable and kindly, sincerely religious and animated by a spirit of service, and taking a keen and cheerful interest in world affairs to the very end, despite his affliction, Sir John Kennedy was the type of a manhood which has helped to make Canada what it is, and those whose work and influence will be impressed upon the generations to come—Toronto Saturday Night.

FORESTS AND HOMES

Canada's forests every year furnish lumber enough to build homes for a million people.
Don't let forests burn up; be careful of fire in the woods.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Ambassador of millions,
We do not know thy name;
O nameless one, who died for us,
Undying be thy fame.

Today, where sleep our glorious dead,
A King mourns at thy grave;
An Empire bows in grief her head—
An Empire thou didst save.

Ambassador of Britons,
Who died that we might live,
Foremost within her Hall of Fame
Thy honored place we give.

What shall we call thee, nameless one?
Britain shall be thy name,
Type of her hero warrior sons
And envoy of her fame.

In peace sleep on, O nameless one,
Sleep; thou hast earned thy rest
By task achieved, by victory won;
Sleep, by an Empire blessed.

A NEW EXPERIMENT

A learned young man who prided himself that he knew more than most people went one evening to call on

ITS A DISGRACE TO HAVE DANDRUFF

Nobody is really clean when they have a crop of dandruff. Just because you take a bath every day and are sure your body is clean is no excuse; if you have dandruff you are overlooking a very important part of your anatomy.

Dandruff will eventually kill your hair if allowed to persist; there is no doubt on this point whatever; aside from the embarrassment it causes both you and your friends it is positively unclean and unhealthy.

"JUSS" (Harrison's special hair tonic and dandruff eradicant), will correct this condition in a hurry; it eradicates dandruff by destroying the dandruff germ, thereby allowing the hair to develop in a healthy manner; hair will stop falling out and a new growth will be promoted provided there is life still left in the roots.

"JUSS" is no "pot-shot." It took two druggists eleven years of laboratory and analytical tests to perfect the formula. It is as different to all other hair tonics as day is to night, because "JUSS" really does kill dandruff and improve the hair wonderfully, and while all other hair decoctions are advertised to do these things, how many can you call to mind that really do them?

Get your bottle today; you'll kick yourself after for not having tried it months ago.

All Macleod druggists sell "JUSS" $2.00 a bottle (a month's treatment)—worth a lot more.

To clean a frying pan after fish or onions, boil out the pan with soda water, washing clean, and then put it on the fire and shake a little oatmeal in.

If pots and pans used in cooking are washed as soon as emptied and while still hot, the housewife will make 50 per cent. saving in time and labor.

A good substitute for mayonnaise can be made by rubbing down a desiccated spoonful of mashed potato with mustard and salt to taste and a little cream instead of salad oil. Then add vinegar to taste.

An old fowl can be made tender if it is first rubbed over with lemon juice then wrapped in buttered paper and steamed for two or three hours, according to size. Of course, if preferred, it can be partially steamed and then roasted and still be tender.

NOTICE

Tenders will be received until the 23rd day of December, 1921, by Messrs. McDonald, Martin & Mackenzie, Solicitors, Macleod, for the purchase of the North East Quarter of Section Thirteen, Township Six, Range Twenty-seven, West of the Fourth Meridian. This land is situated about 20 miles south of the Town of Macleod and there is on the land a small lake and good well with pump attached and a two story frame house. HESTER-BY-THE-HOUR

When Mrs. Mustard grew so affluent that she had no need to work out "by the day" she sent me Hester. Hester is what they call "Mealless help"—by which is meant "between meal help." She comes at half-past eight and stays until half-past twelve, so that I haven't to scurry around at noon for a hot meal for a hard working woman. The hard working mistress saves her hot meal for evening to enjoy it with her husband. Mrs. Mustard couldn't, of course, recommend Hester as being in the same class with herself, she having worked for royalty in her day. Queen Mary she used often to tell me, "just the same as you or me," much more so indeed, than other noble mistresses for whom she had worked.

"They never come near the kitchen," she would say, "but the Queen—why, she was there every day, looking into pots and pans to see they were kept clean."

There followed a long list of Hester's deficiencies, which usually ended, however, with the assurance: "Her washing looks nice on the line, though I see it every week and I know she can wash."

Hester, for her part, indulged in a few humorous digs at the expense of

Mrs. Mustard's royal reminiscences. "Of course, I never worked for the King," she would say, with a tight little smile, "but I have worked in some good houses and I know what's what."

What decidedly wasn't "what" was the glass in my front windows—"which no man should have put into a house like this. It never will come clean. Just look at the oiliness right in the glass now."

After rubbing and polishing vigorously for several minutes she turned red in the face to ask:

"Do you own this house?" "Yes," I admitted apologetically, so evidently did she disapprove of our property.

"Huhph!" she ejaculated, then added, with a burst of generosity as the easement, with its small square panes swung back. "Well, ma'am, when I get rich I'll have some new glass put in these windows for you. I'll have colored glass in the upper panes and plated glass below, and it'll be just lovely. You just wait and see."

So I'm waiting with what patience I can, until Hester gets rich to have my drawing room windows made beautiful.

And, in the meantime, I'm trying to work out a schedule for Hester such as I had for Mrs. Mustard. "Mealless help" is different from help by-the-day, and I have still to find how I can make the very best of it.

My plan with Mrs. Mustard was a fairly good one, I think, when one has help only one day a week. As my family is small and all the bed linen and big things go to the laundry, had her wash only once in two weeks. During the alternate week I myself washed such things as Crepe de Chine and Georgette blouses, ribbons, silk gloves and the like.

At the end of her washing Mrs. Mustard always had time to wash the floors of kitchen, bathroom and verandah and sometimes to do a little sweeping and dusting as well.

On the day she did not wash we housecleaned a room. In this way I hope to go through my whole house, room by room, regularly and avoid the orgy of the spring or fall cleaning. Sometimes a small cupboard will take just as much work to clean as a good-sized room, and, in such a case, I count it as a room. Or again, some room or cupboard may take but half a day and then there is time, afterwards, for cleaning silver or brass or some minders.

My cleaning began with my fruit cellar and, as each room is cleaned I write it on a card so that I shall preserve the order, and each room will receive attention at regular intervals.

The card index! Oh, I must tell you about that again, for I could not keep house without one.

Laundry Work Made Play

When we look back upon the days of our grandmothers and the way they were forced to conduct their households because science had not yet found the easier methods, there is little wonder indeed that they had no time for community work, or, in fact, any activities outside their homes.

Few of us there are who would change with them. And there is little wonder when the average housewife looks about and sees the workless instruments and products that have been prepared since those days and are offered today well within the income.

Outside of washing dishes, the most burdensome task in the household is doing the laundry work. This view is undoubtedly a remnant of the traditional idea of having to wash clothes on a board.

The First Laundry Way

Ever since Eve washed her fig-leaf on a flat stone in the Garden, women have aimed throughout the centuries to get clothes clean by the friction method. It would seem their theory was that the more one rubbed, the more soil would be removed from the clothing.

Another fallacy that had taken hold until recently was that the work had to be done in a sloppy, steaming kitchen or laundry with quantities of boiling water, and that the whole process was generally "hard."

Clothes should be soaked over night where possible. The tub should be prepared with cold water and a proportionate amount of some good washing powder thoroughly mixed. Then the clothes are separated, reserving the colored things for another tub, and soaking only the white clothes in the same tub. When the clothes are ready to be washed the next morning, it will be found adequate in many cases to merely rub the cake of good laundry

The National Crisis

"My appeal is to the whole people; to every man and woman who wants to do right by this country; to everyone who breathes the spirit of our fathers who founded this British Dominion."

Arthur Meighen

THE Election to be held on December 6th will be the most momentous in Canadian history; for as men and women vote will depend the economic stability, the political stability and, indeed, the national stability of this country. Today we find group striving against group, class against class, the industrial and financial structure of the country assailed by false and unsound doctrines and theories, while our great neighbor to the south has adopted a trade exclusion policy directed against Canada's vast agricultural interests.

The currencies of nearly every country in the world are depreciated. The Canadian dollar in the United States is subject to a heavy discount, causing a loss of over one hundred million dollars in exchange annually.

Europe is overwhelmed with war debts—unemployment is acute—and the restoration to pre-war conditions is slow.

While Canada is in a much more favorable condition than many countries, yet there is evidence of stagnation, instability, unemployment and lack of confidence.

Taxes are heavy because the country's efforts in the Great War have become burdensome on account of the misconceived policies and blunders of Governments that directed Canada's affairs prior to 1911.

These conditions are largely the direct aftermath of the war, but they must be dealt with fearlessly and constructively. This is no time to consider experimental changes, or the theories of visionaries.

This is no time for Crerar and his Free Trade Policy.

This is no time for King and his wobbling "charted" policies, varying with each provincial boundary.

It is the time to cling to orderly, stable government in the interest of all the people; to be guided by the experience of the past, proceeding upon lines that have been proven sound.

It is the time to place the destinies of Canada again in the hands of a Government led by a sane, courageous Canadian who has safely brought the country through the trying years of reconstruction, and upon whom we can rely to retain and initiate policies in the interest, not of a group or class, but of all the people.

It is time to support Arthur Meighen and his candidates.

soap on the neckbands and cuffs of each article. The remainder of the soil will have been soaked out of the clothes during the night.

The water is allowed to drain off them. And tepid water, never hot nor cold, takes its place. This time the soap-suds are made by rubbing the clothes with the soap and plunging them up and down several times to soap them thoroughly.

Contrary to the belief of even the better laundresses, science has proved that clothes need not be boiled. If the soaking is done that is all that is necessary to cleanse the garments, besides the soap plunging process that follows next. But to put the clothes into a tub and boil them merely sets the dirt just as boiling a piece of material in dye sets the dye.

Setting Colors

Most reds, pinks, and blacks are fast. But there is no safe rule today owing to the poor substitute dyes that had to be used during the war days and for many seasons afterward. If color suffers, try to set it with a solution of salt, white vinegar, borax, alum or sugar of lead, which, by the way, is a deadly poison. Any of these may be used in the proportion of one level tablespoonful to a gallon of water.

Bran water or starch water, in a very light solution, may be used in place of soap to wash the colored clothes. But if their colors are not too delicate, a good pure soap solution made of shaving a cake of soap into a quart of boiling water and mixing thoroughly until dissolved is excellent. The clothes need only then be soaked up and down in the tepid water to which the solution is added, rinsed carefully and hung in a shady place to dry.

Original Soaps

Soap and its numerous associate products of the combinations of a fat and a caustic alkali, either potash or soda. Both the fat and alkali break down under the force of super-heated steam, and then combining form the two new compounds, soap and glycerine. Perfect soap is neutral, having no excess of alkali or acid.

If the principles of laundering, therefore, are kept in mind and the work systematized with the use of the latest scientific discoveries, laundry day ought to hold no terrors for the housewife of today.

Forethought or looking ahead is disobeying the Scriptural injunction to take no thought for tomorrow. But in this world we have to do it. The father takes out a life insurance to provide for what may be necessary for his family in case of death. The mother of a family also is constantly planning ahead to make the monthly wage of her husband last for another 30 days—till next pay day. Nations have to plan ahead—days, weeks, months and years. The gopher and squirrel lay up a store of nuts or cereals for future emergencies. So it is in every walk of life. Christmas and New Years is coming. You all have to plan for their advent. Don't leave off buying presents till the last day or week. If you see a suitable thing, get it and pay the merchant, or ask him to hold it for you. Then when the time comes, you can give it to the parties you want to surprise. By doing this and saving your money you won't be flustered into hasty buying at the last moment. You will then be able to give a more suitable gift with the money you have saved by taking forethought for the occasion. We have many things suitable for these hard times. You can get an aluminum set—any of our customers can get one—at manufacturer's cost. Then we have a nice lot of stationery in fancy cartons. What more useful for a present? Then our display of Ladies' Handbags and Pocketbooks will be an inducement to the most niggardly giver. Men's Ties, Handkerchiefs and dozens of other attractions for hard times. God loves a cheerful giver, and human beings take after Him.

"THE INVISIBLE DIVORCE" OPENS DOOR TO THE INNER LIVES OF HUNDREDS

New National Picture Depicts Suffering of a Silent Separation That is as Divorcing in Spirit and Body as is a Legal Decree

Beneath the veneer, the empty smiles, the tiny courtesies that society demands when man and wife are in public sometimes there lies a current of misunderstanding and disillusionment that is all that human nature can bear. Stout hearts, proud hearts oftentimes wrap the fragments of a blasted love in draperies of convention and the baffled recording angel of married life records another "Invisible Divorce."

Family pride sometimes rebels at thoughts of newspaper headlines and "picture stories"; thoroughbred natures revolt at having the pangs of their hearts portrayed on the printed page. So two people live on and on, superficially just another moderately happy married couple, secretly as divorced in spirit and body as any of the cases recounted in the press.

It is of this little known phase of the divorce evil that a new National picture called "The Invisible Divorce" depicts. The production is one that will create a sensation wherever shown. It already has attracted the attention of sociological students as presenting a side of this age-long problem that is without the pale of their effectiveness, except possibly in the discouragement of youthful hasty weddings.

Some say that this class of "unseen decrees" is the most numerous of all. Some say that Spartan fortitude still exists among what we call our better classes. At any rate, many will find the door to their inner lives opened by this daring play. It is to be shown at the Empress Theatre Thursday of next week.

England proposes to raise the age limit below which boys may not buy intoxicants from 16 to 18 years. Twenty-one was the age our boys used to have to pretend to be, and we thought it none too old.
